

- ❑ Legnipper's Dreadfort - An old dwarven fortress lost in the great goblin war. Goblins now live here and emulate their twisted idea of human civilization.
- ❑ Feymoot - A new settlement for faerie refugees, funded by Lady Kathryn. Locally renowned for its theatre's, strip clubs, minstrels and jesters.

Notable Locations in Verdania

❑ Norrendorf - Capital of Verdania. Mysterious and corrupt, its streets lined with anti-magic propaganda.

❑ Cliffkeep - A dwarfhold on the eastern border. Older than the Verdanian kingdom, it is built on tradition, industry and honor.

❑ Sylroot - A gnomish village hidden deep within the Sageweald forest.

❑ The Maven Academy - Protected from the rest of Verdania by the wild magic that still lingers in the Blasted Land, the Academy is a school for witches.

❑ The Convent of Still Dawn - An ancient monkish hermitage high in the Stormpeak Mountains. Here, worshippers lead semi-solitary lives steeped in tradition.

Other noteworthy locations

- ❑ The Astronomica - Due to a magical phenomenon, a series of mountain peaks were severed and began to float in the sky. On one of these, is the Astronomica, a repurposed dwarven fortress that now serves as the tower of an Archmage.

- ☐ Athelthorne - The Wood elf capital, sharing the same name as the forest it is in.
- ☐ Maenshar - The High elf capital of the Maenshari Archipelago. It is a magical city of towering glass, gems and coral.
- ☐ Dwandelheim - The oldest dwarfhold. Behind its heavy gates, it protects some of the most ancient runes and spells in the land.

Magic and Religion

Magic can be found in all corners of Pendayria. While the communities in Ayderon may practice it freely, capitalising on it's potential, Verdanian magic users are often forced to keep their abilities hidden or face trial by the feared Witch hunters.

We use the same gods as the ones listed here in the Faerun setting:

A Brief History of Pendayria

The Unspooling / The Fall of the Crystal Tower (0PU)

The Unspooling was a catastrophic event that shattered the world's magical infrastructure, causing civilizations to collapse almost overnight. Before this disaster, magic was a fundamental part of life, with floating civilizations, instantaneous teleportation, and powerful arcane powered constructs being commonplace. However, the ley lines that fueled this advanced society were violently withdrawn when the High Elves of the Crystal Tower attempted a ritual involving artefacts known as the Loom Weave of Eightfold. This severed the connection between the arcane and the physical world. Entire cities fell out of the sky, and the magic that once permeated every aspect of life became unstable and dangerous. People who had extended their lifespan with magic, turned to dust. Spellbooks unwrote themselves. Portals closed, never to be reopened. The Unspooling marked the end of an era and thrust the world into a dark age where magic had to be relearned and civilization slowly rebuilt from the ruins.

The Battle of Cragleaf Basin (239PU)

The Battle of Cragleaf Basin stands as the bloodiest and most devastating conflict in the known history of Pendayria. Sparked by a failed trade deal between the Dwarves of Throlor and the Wood Elves of Athelthorne, the battle escalated into a full-scale war. The dwarves, with their gnomish allies, unleashed powerful explosive devices that wreaked havoc on the elven forces, resulting in massive casualties. In a desperate act, the elven sorcerers called upon ancient gods, casting a petrification spell that turned the entire battlefield, including the combatants and the land itself, to stone. This grim tableau still stands as a haunting reminder of the futility of war, and the truce that followed has remained a tenuous peace ever since.

The Verdanian Witch Hunts (250-300PU)

Following the catastrophic Battle of Cragleaf Basin and the growing distrust of magic, the kingdom of Verdania descended into a dark period known as the Witch Hunts. Led by a radical religious order known as the Righteous Flame, these hunts targeted anyone suspected of practicing magic, often resulting in brutal executions. The fear and paranoia spread across the land, leading to the persecution of countless innocent people. Magic users either fled to more tolerant regions, such as Athelthorne and Paulderburg, or went into hiding. The Witch Hunts left deep scars on Verdania, fracturing communities and sowing mistrust that still lingers, generations on.

The Great War / The Goblin War (520-527PU)

The Great War, also known as the Goblin War, was a devastating conflict that erupted when the goblin clans of Upper Ayderon, united under the fearsome warlord Legnipper, launched a series of brutal attacks on the surrounding regions. The goblins overran villages, slaughtering the inhabitants and eventually capturing a dwarven citadel, which they transformed into their stronghold, Legnipper's Dreadfort. The war raged for seven years, with the combined forces of Paulderburg and Throlor struggling to repel the goblin invaders. Finally, the goblin forces were defeated and driven back into the mountains, but the conflict left deep wounds and a lingering fear of a resurgence.

The Verdanian Conflict (540-567PU)

The Verdanian Conflict was a prolonged and bitter war between the kingdoms of Ayderon and Verdania, driven by long-standing rivalries and territorial ambitions. The conflict ravaged the continent, with battles such as the Battle of the Rosemarches and the creation of the Blasted Lands serving as grim reminders of the war's devastation. The use of powerful magic on both sides left the land scarred and desolate, particularly in regions like the Rosemarches and the Blasted Lands. Although a temporary ceasefire was established with the Treaty of the Twin Rivers in 565PU, the war ultimately concluded with the Fall of Verdania in 567PU, when the kingdom's capital, Norrendorf, was besieged and King Eadric III was killed. Verdania's collapse marked the end of an era and the fragmentation of the once-proud kingdom.

The Eruption of Black Mountain (630PU)

The Eruption of Black Mountain in 630PU was a cataclysmic event that shook the entire continent. When a Red Dragon made its lair inside the dormant volcano, it unknowingly awakened a powerful fire elemental. In a display of power, the elemental caused the volcano to erupt, spewing ash and lava across Lower Ayderon. The skies darkened as ash clouds spread, and the Blackwater Lake began to boil. The eruption wreaked havoc across the region until a group of adventurers defeated the fire elemental, returning the mountain to dormancy. However, the eruption left lasting scars on the land, and the legend persists that a portal to the Plane of Fire still exists within the volcano's depths.
